

2021 Winter & Spring LSAT Tutoring

Academic Background

Ryan Zang is a 2021 graduate at Brown University concentrating in History and East Asian Studies with a 3.94 GPA. He obtained a 179 on the LSAT.

Teaching Experience

Private tutor for TOEFL and SSAT. English tutor at middle schools in China and Chinese language teaching assistant at Brown University.

Targeted Clients

Potential or current law school applicants who will be taking or retaking the LSAT within the next six months.

Class Schedule

1 hour per session on Saturdays and/or Sundays. A minimum of 1 and maximum of 3 sessions per week based on the clients' needs and schedule.

Curriculum

The specific content and length of the curriculum will be discussed and determined by Ryan and the client during the free consultation session, primarily based on the available time that the client has for studying before the exam date, the client's strengths and weaknesses, etc. Ryan requires that potential clients complete at least one official LSAT practice test in an exam setting and bring the result to the consultation session for evaluation.

Pricing

Consultation Session: one-time only, ~20 minutes, FREE

Class Sessions: one-hour sessions, $175 per hour

The number of class sessions will be determined by Ryan after the consultation session based on the client's needs and level of preparation. Each session will primarily focus on one of the test sections (LG, LR, RC). It is estimated that an intensive and comprehensive instruction of the material and all question types require at least 8-10 sessions. Students may also request additional sessions for blind review or even law school application advice with Ryan for the same hourly price.

Instructor's Message:

Welcome to Perfect Score Tutors! My name is Ryan, and I am a Brown University undergraduate who scored a 179 on the LSAT in 2020. Let's be honest, the LSAT is without a doubt a very difficult test that requires a great amount of preparation, but that does not mean it is uncrackable. What I have learned from studying for the most important exams in my life such as the SAT and the LSAT is that unless you are a true genius or just an insanely lucky person (which I am not), repetitive but smart practice is the only way to ace a difficult exam. There should at least be one "intensive practice" phase (at least a month) during your test prep for the LSAT when you would sit down every other day if not every day to complete, blind review, and extract lessons from a PT in great depth.

Such intensive practice requires resolve, but I am not here to do the mental work for you. It is ultimately YOU who have to do that, and if you are not willing to grind on the PTs, my lessons would mostly be useless to you. That is also why I do not guarantee that all of my students would achieve a score over 175 or 170. However, if you have the strong will to succeed and commit your energy, I will make sure that none of your time and efforts are wasted during your test prep. I will share and explain to you all the essential time-saving tricks and crucial notes that I have taken after filtering through numerous prep books and repeatedly taking all the 90 PTs. I will go through blind reviews with you, teaching you the most efficient ways to utilize a PT and the mistakes I made so that you could avoid them. Depending on your strengths and weaknesses, I will also spend time in class to focus on specific sections with you and show you the most useful approaches I have come up with for each question type in a concise and simple manner.

I look forward to seeing you at the consultation sessions, and if you have any questions about me or my curriculum, please do not hesitate to contact me at perfectscoretutors1@gmail.com.
