

LSAT Tutoring

About me:

Hey! My name is Sammy, and I recently graduated from Yale University. I scored a 179 on the LSAT-Flex last year and have been tutoring full-time ever since.

I'm from Westchester, New York. In college, I enjoyed participating in a prison tutoring program and singing in an a cappella group. I love music, sports, traveling, and spending time with friends.

Teaching experience:

I have tutored 28 students for the LSAT, and have worked with countless students in various subjects throughout high school and college. I love teaching— I hope to become a professor one day!

Here's what one of my LSAT students recently wrote about me:

"Sammy is so understanding and helps you feel confident in your work and progress. I tried a tutor before him as well as two different courses and truthfully it was working with him one on one that really helped me gain a 10+ score increase not only making me confident in applying to my dream schools but giving me more options!"

Teaching philosophy:

Studying needs to be fun and exciting so that you stay engaged and motivated. I build personal relationships with my students so that they feel like they always have someone supporting them throughout their LSAT journey. My students frequently text and call me to ask questions or just to fill me in on their daily progress. As you can tell, I'm extremely invested in my students' success, and will always hold them accountable for keeping up with their studying!

I acknowledge that every student works, thinks, learns, and takes tests completely differently, and so I make sure my instruction is very individualized. I build personalized lesson plans for each student based on their current needs, desires, and points of improvement. I also realize that there is no one proper way to attack the LSAT—I present students with several different methods for attacking each section and question type. Same with timing strategies—my students and I try several different strategies to identify, and then implement, what works best for them. Additionally, students and I build personalized study schedules that fit within their busy lives. Finally, I spend a lot of time delving into the analytics of my students' pretests and homework assignments to identify their specific weaknesses and discern how they can spend their study time most effectively.

Cost:

Range: $175-210/hr

I'm available Monday-Friday anytime between 12-9pm EST. My normal sessions tend to be 1.5 or 2 hours, but whatever works for you is fine with me (e.g., some students just do 1 hour sessions). I'm very flexible with scheduling— there are no cancellation fees. We don't need to have a “set” meeting time; rather, we can schedule sessions on short notice whenever you feel like you need some more help. This helps many of my students fit tutoring within their otherwise busy lives. Additionally, I help students at any step of their LSAT journey— I've worked with many students who are just starting out, and I've worked with many who have just a couple weeks before their test.

Next steps:

Please contact perfectscorestutors1@gmail.com for a 30-minute free, no-commitment consultation session where you can ask any and all of your LSAT-related questions. I'd love to meet you and discuss how we can implement personalized studying strategies to help you reach your full potential. I also can't wait to share my strategies with you!